My comments relate to all environmental impacts as well as economic impact. How can these impacts be separated by locality? What happens at the proposed port site has an impact backward. If the mines have no ports they might hesitate to begin ~~the~~ destroying the environment and the wellbeing of those who live upwind/upstream from the port. How many jobs will be lost in Montana and the ranches. If the beef industry ranching is impacted how many jobs dependent upon beef will be impacted — how will food ~~services~~ be impacted — Jobs? Jobs? Then there's health. How will the population of people with lung diseases be impacted? There is no such thing as clean coal! Have you ever handled a briquet?

Or taken an art class using charcoal to sketch? How clean are your fingers? Clean coal?

And our beautiful Columbia Gorge? We have fought long and hard to keep it as clean as possible. The Columbia Gorge is the only place like it in the world! How shortsighted is it to destroy or besmirch it with dirty coal trains just for 150 or so jobs?

These subjects cannot be separated out. The entirety of the ~~industry~~ projects to mine and ship coal must be considered as a whole. The impact to the life — human and otherwise — cannot be ignored. To do so is foolish, shortsighted, and irresponsible.
