The open bedded transportation of coal to the proposed terminals will endanger multiple forms of life — from marine species to children and air people in surrounding communities, train traffic will lower the quality of life and pose threats of immediate as well as long term danger. Health impacts such as asthma directly affect residents, while trains passing through at such small intervals impedes emergency vehicle response.

These impacts — and MANY more — NEED to be evaluated at a close and realistic level before any type of permission is granted to move forward with the Millennium terminals.
