After hearing speakers at scoping meeting I am amazed that this process is going forward at all. Surely nothing can be worth the environmental damage that this industry is doing. Two hundred jobs is just not worth destroying the planet. Just not worth destroying farming and ranching communities in Montana and Wyoming.

We can do better, the Millennium site could be developed to provide public access and recreation on Columbia River, and land for residential development. The jobs and tax base created this way would be far more valuable than anything that Millerium could do and at much less cost to the environment and to the taxpayers pocket books.

The bottom line for me after hearing both sides is that I just don't want to be forced to subsidize an industry that I don't want or believe in.
