There is no such thing as clean coal. Removing coal from the earth is destructive to the environment, to the communities where the coal is mined, and to the workers who risk their health and lives by mining it. Transporting the coal after it's ripped from the earth is very destructive and a source of pollution as many here will testify. Burning the coal will contribute to global warming, which concerns me most of all. By continuing to mine, transport, and consume coal, we
